Dear Department of Justice:

I am concerned about the settlement issue that would strip the Microsoft Internet Explorer browser from the Microsoft Windows operating system. I spend a great deal of time online and have used Internet Explorer and Netscape Navigator. The Navigator browser is slower, more intrusive, less stable, and an inferior product in my opinion. If Microsoft Windows did not come with Internet Explorer I would have to spend hours downloading it over a slow dial-up connection. I format my computer's hard drive frequently for testing and to have to download the program over and over after each install of Microsoft Windows would decrease my productivity. I urge you to at the very LEAST allow Microsoft to include the option to install the Internet Explorer browser off the Microsoft Windows CD

Sincerely,
